

In a world where people are being killed for the color of their skin, the people they love, and their religious beliefs, it is not difficult to conclude that there is a problem. We need to stop these prejudices and begin to embrace and accept our differences. Diversity is the gift we bless society with; a world where everyone talks, looks, and acts the same, would be dull. Everyone has a unique feature that makes them stand out from the rest of the world, these differences should be cherished and valued as they make us who we are. We all grow up with different beliefs, traditions, and culture. This allows us to enhance our awareness by learning and sharing new perspectives that we may not have thought of. Diversity also allows for a better understanding of how different people view the world. The United States is one of the most diverse countries whose continual migration further diversifies it. We must love, cherish, and embrace our differences by talking, and building bridges that will lead to societal advancement. For us to advance, we must learn to accept one another, no matter our differences.
